What if it's not available in Oxford?

- Try an interlibrary loan – place requests via <https://solo.bodleian.ox.ac.uk/interlib>
 - We will try to find a scanned PDF of the article from another library
 - Cost is usually £5 but some departments will pay – check yours!
- Recommend the Bodleian Libraries buys a copy/subscription via <https://www.Bodleian.ox.ac.uk/subjects-and-libraries/recommendations>
- Google to see if an open access version is available – maybe through the author's institution
- Buy the individual article from the publisher (last resort!)

Why not just use SOLO or Google Scholar?

- Subject-specific databases are curated by experts to only include journals relevant to your field
 - SOLO and Google Scholar are enormous collections covering every subject – you will get overwhelming numbers of results
- You can use the tricks (*, ?, “”, AND, OR, NOT) in databases
 - SOLO’s advanced search can help, but it is not as sophisticated as IBSS or other databases
- Articles in databases are tagged with keywords to aid searching
